Slash knew he had no cause for complaint. He had asked for it, hadn't he? He was curious. Eager, even. And it had been pleasant at first. How was he to know that Axl would lose control?

No, that wasn't true; he knew. Axl was never in control. That was part of the risk, and part of the thrill. Slash liked playing with fire; he always knew he could get burned, and it finally happened. It was exciting in its own way.

Slash paid no more attention to the blood washing down the drain then Axl gave to his screams.
